Valuation Fee Table

The building permit fee includes the cost of plan checking, inspection, and issuance fee. The cost of plan check is calculated by multiplying the cost of inspection by a factor of 0.65.

Table 2, Valuation Fee Table is used to calculate the inspection fee which, is then used to calculate the total (plan check and inspection) permit cost for valuation based permits. Refer to Appendix 2 for an example of using Table 2.

Appendix 1 Construction Type Definitions

Construction Types

All buildings are classified according to their construction type. Type IIs least combustible and Type V is most combustible. The more combustible a building is and the more hazardous the use is, the more the maximum allowable area is limited. All construction types and use groups are allowed to have increased areas by using sprinklers.

Type I (IA or 18)

Typically these are concrete frame buildings made of noncombustible materials. All of the building elements (structural frame, bearing walls, floors and roofs) are fire resistance rated.

Type II (IIA or IIB)

These buildings are constructed of noncombustible materials. Typically these are masonry bearing walls structures with steel studs for walls and steel bar joists for floor and roof structures. IIA has fire rated building elements (structural frame, bearing walls, floors and roofs). 118 is the most common construction type for commercial buildings because the building elements are not required to be fire resistance rated but still must be non-combustible.

Type III (IIIA or IIIB)

Type III construction is that type of construction in which the exterior walls are of noncombustible materials and the interior building elements are of any material permitted by the code (combustible or non-combustible). This is typical of buildings with masonry bearing walls and wood roofs or floors.

Type IV (IVA or IVB)

This is Heavy Timber construction which is not common In California except perhaps in some worship facilities.

Type V (VA or VB)

Type V construction is typically wood frame construction. VA requires fire rated assemblies for all building elements (structural frame, bearing walls, floors and roofs); this is often seen in older construction that predates sprinklers but still not commonly used. VB is very common because it does not require any fire rating. VB is typically used for single family dwellings and garages.
